BREAKING: Jack Phillips Wins His Case

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled in favor today of Jack Phillips, the owner of Masterpiece Cakeshop in Lakewood, Colorado, who declined to bake a custom cake to celebrate a same-sex wedding because of his religious beliefs.

Masterpiece Cakeshop v. Colorado Civil Rights Commission is a historic case involving religious liberty, LGBT rights, and the First Amendment.

In the 7-2 ruling, the high court said the Colorado Commission of Civil Rights, which had ruled against Phillips, demonstrated "clear and impermissible hostility" toward the baker and cake artist's Christian belief that marriage is the union of one man and one woman.

"The Civil Rights Commission's treatment of his case has some elements of a clear and impermissible hostility toward the sincere religious beliefs that motivated [Phillips'] objection," wrote Justice Anthony Kennedy in the majority opinion.

As The Daily Signal previously reported, in 2014 Colorado Civil Rights Commissioner Diann Rice compared Phillips' not making a cake to slavery and the Holocaust. Rice apparently didn't know that Phillips' father fought in World War II and was part of a group that helped liberate Buchenwald concentration camp.

"For her to compare not making a cake to the Holocaust, knowing what my dad went through, is ludicrous, and personally offensive," Phillips, 62, told The Daily Signal.

"This is a big win for the religious liberty of all Americans," says Ryan Anderson, a senior fellow at The Heritage Foundation. "The Court held that the state of Colorado was 'neither tolerant nor respectful' of Jack Phillips's beliefs about marriage. But as the Court also noted 'religious and philosophical objections to gay marriage are protected views and in some instances protected forms of expression.'"

"Americans should be free to live their lives, including at work, in accordance with their belief that marriage unites husband and wife. Congress and the states should make this crystal clear by passing legislation, such as the First Amendment Defense Act, which explicitly prevents the type of government intolerance that took place in Colorado," Anderson added.

This story is breaking and will be updated.

_

This article has been republished with permission from The Daily Signal.